

RAYMOND WILLIAMS:
Hope and Defeat in the Struggle for Socialism

Don Milligan

www.studiesinanti-capitalism.net

© Don Milligan, 2007. This monograph may be extensively quoted, freely copied in part or in its entirety, on condition that the following citation is always used:

Raymond Williams:
Hope and Defeat in the Struggle for Socialism,
by Don Milligan, published by Studies in Anti-Capitalism at www.studiesinanti-capitalism.net 2007.

RAYMOND WILLIAMS:
Hope and Defeat in the Struggle for Socialism

Don Milligan

CONTENTS

Introduction: Reading Williams

Chapter One: Defending the Soviet Experience

Solzhenitsyn's Witness

The 'Soviet Literary Controversy in Retrospect'

A Commitment Undiminished by Defeat

Early Enthusiasms and the Popular Front

Socialist Realism and 'the utopian impulse'

Beyond Soviet Experience

Chapter Two: Marxist Literary Criticism

Marxism and Marxism(s)

L. C. Knights's Challenge to Marxism

Politics and Letters, Reading and Criticism

The Caudwell Controversy

Constructing An Alternative Tradition

Theory: Williams's Independent Course

Marxism Reasserted

Chapter Three: Drama, Context and History

The Time of Leavis & Bateson

The Structure of Feeling

A Kaleidoscope for Feeling

Encounter with T. S. Eliot

Religion as A Whole Way of Life

Middleton Murry's Modes of Feeling

Muriel Bradbrook's Historical Criticism

Williams: 'a delegate from the future'?

Chapter Four: Language, Film, Television and Advertising

Structuring Meaning

Thoughts on Film

Television Flow: One Night in Miami

Monty Python's Flying Circus

Advertising: The Hidden Persuaders

Chapter Five: Literary Representations of Class

Wordsworth and Clare, Cobbett and Austen

Clare and Tressell's impatience with the Parochial and the Reactionary

Sean O'Casey and 'endless bibulous and blathering talk'

Gissing and Brecht: The Individual Against Society

Gissing's Prejudices

The Case of Felix Holt

The Working Class: Deadlock or Incorporation?

Chapter Six: Williams's Novels

'A specifically Welsh structure of feeling'

Future Sadness

Postmodern Geography and other strategies

A Topology of Labour

The Pleasures of Work

Writing Beyond Class

Remote Controls: The Metropolis at Work

Feeling the Struggle

The Volunteers

Chapter Seven: Belonging, Exile and George Orwell

'Born and bred among the presumed Welsh'

A Welsh European in Border Country

George Orwell: A Cold War Émigré

The 'Invasion' of Literature by Politics

Necessary Killing and the Fact of Murder

Colluding with Dystopia

Plain Men Bumping into Experience

Animal Farm: Anti-Communism and Collective Failure

Chapter Eight: Real History and the Knowable Community*The Country and the City*

Jane Austen and George Eliot

Discourse and The Great Tradition

Placing Thomas Hardy

F. R. Leavis and Dickens

Entrapped by Tradition

Chapter Nine: Modernism and the Unknowable Community

Modernism as Rupture

The Unknowable Community

Joyce's Exiles and the rejection of ordinary feelingModernism and the Attenuation of Social Consciousness

Bloomsbury and Bourgeois Dissidence

Postscript: Positive CriticismBibliography*Acknowledgements

I should like to thank all the staff of the Open University, Manchester Public Library, the John Rylands Library, Manchester Metropolitan University Library and the British Library.

I extend warm thanks to Dr David Johnson of the Open University Literature Department for his patient criticism and encouragement. I must also thank Dr Linnie Blake, of Manchester Metropolitan University, Dr Stephen Regan of Royal Holloway, and Dr Robert Fraser of the Open University, for their advice and support.

I was sustained throughout by Gary Banham's affection, conversation, and criticism, and by the support of my friends and colleagues Robeena Amjad, Lesley Farage, Keith Gould, Frank Carr, Ian Townson, Terry Stewart, Mary Naughton, and Joe Whelan.